

Laurentian Bank Securities ECONOMIC RESEARCH AND STRATEGY

Bank of Canada Decision – Rate Hike: Not Today but Moving Closer

The Bank of Canada (BoC) left its overnight rate target unchanged at 1.25% this morning. More importantly for financial markets, the statement explaining this decision took a hawkish turn: "Overall, developments since April further reinforce Governing Council's view that higher interest rates will be warranted to keep inflation near target. Governing Council will take a gradual approach to policy adjustments, guided by incoming data."

In comparison, the April statement ended by: "higher interest rates will be warranted over time, although some monetary policy accommodation will still be needed to keep inflation on target...In this context, Governing Council will remain cautious with respect to future policy adjustments, guided by incoming data". Our interpretation is that the BoC sees a growing case for a rate hike in the near future. Citing a "gradual approach" also means the BoC does not plan to hike 3-4 times during the second half of 2018.

This relatively more hawkish tone from the BoC is driven by stronger oil prices, some upside for the U.S. economy and by the recognition that "activity in the first quarter appears to have been a little stronger than projected" in Canada. The Canadian real GDP report will be released tomorrow at 8:30AM; the BoC had projected 1.3% q/q saar growth in its April's MPR (our call stands at 1.5% while the consensus is at 1.9%).

The BoC nevertheless did not hike today, preferring to wait at least until the July 11th decision. In our view, the biggest single event that could prevent the BoC from raising its policy rate in mid-July is the announcement of punitive tariffs on Canadian steel and aluminium products this Friday by the U.S. White House. "Guided by incoming data", the positive global and domestic economic momentum will need to be sustained for the BoC to hike in mid-July.

Bottom Line: Although U.S. trade policy uncertainty remains in place, the list of justifications to delay the next policy rate hike is shrinking. We continue to see a 25bps hike at the July 11th meeting if steel and aluminium tariffs are not enacted. Beyond July 11th, the monetary tightening cycle is expected to be smooth. Back-to-back 25bps policy rate increases, as the BoC was able to do in July and September of last year due to extremely robust GDP growth readings, are very unlikely this time around. We see the subsequent BoC rate hike in December or early 2019.

Sébastien Lavoie | Chief Economist, 514 350-2931 | lavoies@vmbi.ca

This document is intended only to convey information. It is not to be construed as an investment guide or as an offer or solicitation of an offer to buy or sell any of the securities mentioned in it. The author is an employee of Laurentian Bank Securities (LBS), a wholly owned subsidiary of the Laurentian Bank of Canada. The author has taken all usual and reasonable precautions to determine that the information contained in this document has been obtained from sources believed to be reliable and that the procedures used to summarize and analyze it are based on accepted practices and principles. However, the market forces underlying investment value are subject to evolve suddenly and dramatically. Consequently, neither the author nor LBS can make any warranty as to the accuracy or completeness of information, analysis or views contained in this document or their usefulness or suitability in any particular circumstance. You should not make any investment or undertake any portfolio assessment or other transaction on the basis of this document, but should first consult your Investment Advisor, who can assess the relevant factors of any proposed investment or transaction. LBS and the author accept no liability of whatsoever kind for any damages incurred as a result of the use of this document or of its contents in contravention of this notice. This report, the information, opinions or conclusions, in whole or in part, may not be reproduced, distributed, published or referred to in any manner whatsoever without in each case the prior express written consent of Laurentian Bank Securities.

LAURENTIAN BANK
SECURITIES